The U.N. announces that a massive aid package for the reconstruction of a war-torn, developing nation has been approved. The nations contributing financial aid will focus on aiding in the establishment of an interim political structure, assisting with refugees, improving the medical and sanitation care, and creating employment opportunities for the citizenry. World leaders meet to decide on effective political candidates, the Red Cross mobilizes, the global finance markets perk up, and businesses around the world vie for the untapped money-making prospects in the region. In a fast-paced international marketplace where world affairs and finance frequently intersect, a few well-informed companies and agencies are already there. Are your clients?
