

Wall Street

The U.S. Producer Price Index is released at 8:30am. According to the Labor Department, prices dipped by 0.2 percent, instead of increasing by the predicted 0.1 percent. Economists begin the debate over this deflationary result, and some are certain the Fed will lower interest rates. Others are equally certain that the rate will stay unchanged. Within moments, the market reflects this mixed response--futures back off, bonds come off session lows, and stocks have modest gains. The well-informed investors and executives keep abreast of the market uncertainty and act accordingly. The only thing certain on Wall Street is that key information is critical for success. How can you make sure that your clients are able to react to the news in time?
